

The Ignorance In Our Eyes
By Lena Friesen

Our fears live in shadows, lurking around every corner, waiting for their chance. We peer into the darkness but see nothing, oblivious. When we look away they rip us out of our blanket of naiveness and force us to meet the eyes of the world. We are shocked by all the things we refused to see. The stare of this world is enough to burn us alive. The smoke cleans the ignorance out of our eyes as we see everyone in their true form. We say that we are all the same, and we are right. We are all monsters.